I think this game has a good amount of replayability and decisions actually seem to matter. I think it could have gone with a few more features though, like randomized or multiple available employess, but instead you get the same four every time. $10 might be a bit much, but definitely get this on a sale.. one more time mom. please one more time :). This feels like a point and click adventure. Its got good pixelated art and a good soundtrack, but it feels like a lonnnnng stroll with nothing happening. It is a beautiful piece of pixelated art / landscape, but just dull and too soothing for me. I can imagine this would be an awesome game for some, go youtube it see if you like it.. Still better than No Mans Sky. Amazing, funny, fun team based third person shooter with minor MOBA elements. If you have friends and they're all willing, it's a fantastic game though.. This game is so aWeSome. I just LoST thE tRack of TIme anD missED mY graduatioN exAms, NoW I neeD to GO to ArMeika. 9000/10/10/1. STRONGLY ADVICE. game of the year 2020. . .((#Φ?Φ#))9. what i can say....i have 2 regrets...how come i never saw this game ...and how come i doubt in buy it...well recetear is the best game i had play...and cute...and this game is cute and is a good run game...still dont know about multiplayer....but i hope more buy this game.. Wonderful rpg, emotional and beautifully made, so many routes, plus a new game plus makes replaying even better. Unplayably bad. Save your money

While this isn't a bad game, it is uninspired. But it's nice looking enough and easy to play, so I feel like it deserves a thumbs up despite not being particularly exciting. If you're super into the genre and have exhausted the best Steam has to offer (Kingdom Rush, Defender's Quest, and Royal Defense are the first titles that come to mind), then it's worth picking up on sale.. I'm having great fun. Can't believe I've missed this mod.. You find yourself in a house, or is it a house, where you can't seem to remember what is happening. There's a door to get out, but there's something odd going on. You soon find out that sometimes, when you close doors, and then reopen them the rooms change on the other side of the door. Reality seems to be changing as you move through this place, but what is it, and will you be able to escape it?

Graphically Wooden Floor looks really generic, and I feel like a lot of the game consists of sample pieces that came with the graphics engine. That is not to say that the game looks bad, but it just seemed like there was a lot of duplication to try to fill the game.

There are several parts of the game where there's actually some skill involved in getting through a section, and these are actually the sections that I liked the least as I felt like these were the sections where I was at the mercy of the physics engine/collision detection, and it was frustrating. There are times where you have to time jumps, land just perfect, or beware of objects that could slightly move you to a position that would spell your death.

The sounds of the game were interesting, there was a TON of creaking wood, which I guess is just a result of the title of the game, but after a while the constant creaking probably should have changed rhythms or fade in and out to break up what was going on in the game. The best music in the game had to be in the room with the crying mask, I couldn't put my finger on it but there was something very familiar about it and at the same time it was something that I had no issue to listening to over and over again.

Ironically that part of the game, if you are like me, will be played over and over again because of the difficulty of that section. The thing is that all of a sudden you absolutely have to pay attention to all that is happening around you, something you really never had to do throughout the rest of the game.

The thing about this game is that its only about 43 minutes long, and at the end I kind of felt like there should have been more. I'm of the opinion that if you are going to use some sort of mechanics or have a difficult part that you're going to use that concept more than once, but the developer never did that, which kind of left me wondering why there wasn't more of the game.

Don't get me wrong, I liked playing that game, and yes I had some frustrating parts where I was about ready to strangle someone, but it was interesting. I would have really liked to have known a little bit more about what the heck was going on, but I did like the fact that there were helpful notes scattered around that kind of kept you on the right path. In the end I'm going to have to give this game a 6.9 out of 10. There's just not enough, and except for the very end there was no really substance to the game.. Great little game! Not long but what is there is fun, and it'll run on pretty much anything..... this game is by far the worst iv ever played in VR.

Make a russian subtitles, please. I remember playing this on the 360 and I loved it! The only thing is that I didn't get the chance to play online with other people on 360 and hopefully the MP will be fully ressurected for this game via PC! It's a great FPS that, as a friend said in his review, should of set the standard for game series like MOH, COD, and Battlefield! The one thing that I regret is that the devs haven't made a sequel! I hope Nordic Games does though, albeit in a form of a new title! One other thing that I must say, if you are getting this game, I suggest you get PhysX Legacy since this game does need it to run on Windows 7! That sucks, but it's a small price to pay for a great game!
