The updates cover several major features of the software. The most important new feature is the compatibility of the QGIS 3.22 release with the QGIS 3.24 release. The following is an overview of the changes included in this release, with more details on the new features available in the online documentation. What's new in QGIS? ----- 3D support in Vector layers and maps The QGIS project has introduced support for vector layers in 3D. Features such as the use of a side-view effect, and the ability to query geometries using expressions, as well as transformation and rendering of points of interest (POI), are available. A complete 3D world in QGIS 3.24 In addition, QGIS 3.24 introduces a complete 3D world for vector layers and maps. This allows you to transform and render a 3D environment on top of your map, providing an immersive environment. When the '3D' plugin is enabled, QGIS creates a 3D layer and visualizes a spherical projection of the current map. While this may seem like a simple addition, it provides new opportunities for mapmaking and data visualisation. Note: The 3D rendering is based on the Mapnik 0.7.2 API, but the project is still in the early stages of development and does not yet support all the Mapnik features yet. Quick and flexible 3D conversion The 3D plugin allows quick conversion of a map from a standard to a 3D map. When it is activated, the plugin automatically detects the projection of your map and will create a spherical projection of the map. Map rotation QGIS 3.24 supports the rotation of the map using a map rotation plugin and allows you to easily change the map orientation by just rotating it. Custom map display QGIS 3.24 introduces new options and tools to configure how your map is displayed. The new 'Custom Map Display' settings in QGIS allow you to configure all options to your liking: for example, you can control the zoom level, which tool tips are displayed, the colours of the map display and other options to suit your preferences. For a detailed overview of the features and settings available, please refer to the online documentation.
